TUSCALOOSA

Tuscaloosa was a great Indian chief, who befriended the Spaniard explorer DeSoto but was repaid in cruelty. His capitol city was Mauvilla, a huge fort built of trunks of trees driven into the ground, and supported with cross timbers, and strong vines. Here a great battle was fought against DeSoto, and his men, but DeSoto was victorious and completely destroyed this great Indian town and the race that built it.

Who Paid For The Ad Run Last Week By The Trading Post

The Trading Post more than made up for the cost of the ad by the extra volume of business. NET PROFIT increased many times over the usual run of Saturday trade. Stock was moved out of the store to make way for springs goods and money to pay for those goods came into the cash register.

Customers coming into The Trading Post didn't pay for the ad because they saved money by taking advantage of bargains offered. They bought merchandise at a saving so they benefited.

The Clipper benefited in this exchange, too By carrying this ad to its readers, it performed a service in carrying a message that enabled subscribers to save money. In this way the paper gained the confidence of its readers who will be looking for other advertisements in the future.

Who paid for the ad, then? Every mercantile, dry goods and ladies ready-to-ware store in Elba who didnot advertise paid for The Trading Post ad last week. Customers walked past their stores to The Trading Post to take advantage of advertised bargains, thus cutting the all-important Saturday trade for these establishments.
